Dame Fashion Foregoes Ostentation in Hour of National Crisis.

GRAVER FACES APPEAR

Uniforms and Lapel Flags Supplant Fine Toggery on Fifth Avenue.

The chadow of war hovered very lightly on Fifth avenue yesterday, but unmistakable impress was there. It could be noted in the flags on the passing otor cars, on the buildings, in the lapels of men and sometimes on the coat of a woman; in the recruiting car which passed occasionally, in the hasty scraps of conversation which came to one's ear of what they meant.

The adulation paid Dame Fashion was there, but there was something in the air bigger and better than clothes, and holstered ostentation of Easter Sunday had been toned by war. Not that it seemed to weigh heavily upon the paraders—far from that; but there were RED CROSS OPENING incidents which reminded them that saunter as they might there were stern things doing in the city about them which had little in common with fash-

There wasn't much to this dress: it was a sort of Fakirs' ball costume of a hula-hula straw skirt and it was worn airly by a dusky doll of fully six inches in height. But it caught little Dame Fash-ion's eye, and she forgot her boredom and her governess, ran to the window and clapped her hands with glee, much and clapped her hands with give, much to the delight of those who were more or less successfully mastering their emo-tions. Momentarily things got worse. At Suffolk street Miss Rosis Mussilche, honor coed at the School of Journal sm and now editress of the Social Notes Department of the Esuna, was caught in a sudden overflow of Russian red and got a cickness. Then along came the Hom. Ginger McGinness, yelling directions in perfect Yiddish (Ginger was born and brought up on the East Side) from behind the pushcart, tried to guide the Mayor as his Honor pressed forward through the crowd backward.
